U.S. Weighs Pulling Of Missiles to Save Arms Sale to Saudis

By John M. Goshko

Washington Past Service WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration, facing stiff coogressiooal resistance to its planned $1 billion arms sale to Saudi Arabia, is tentatively offering to withdraw 1,600 Maverick antitank missiles from the package in bopes of making the deal more palatable to critics.

Sources said Mooday that the administration was trying to de-termine whether concern in Coogress over threats to Israel's security would be assnaged if President Ronald Reagan delayed the $360 million Maverick sale indefinitely.

The sources stressed, though, that the idea was being discussed informally and that a decision had oot been made.

Oo June 11, Mr. Reagan withdrew a proposal to sell the Maver-icks after it became evident that Congress would vote overwbelmingly to block the deal.

When it became known last mooth that the administration was considering resubmitting the sale as part of a larger package, oppo-nents warned that it would touch off a major new test of strength between the White House and the Democratic-controlled Congress.

The plan being pressed by the administratioo in informal talks with Congress, the sources said, gives priority to the sale of 12 F-15C and F-15D jet fighters to serve as replacements for Saudi planes that crash or wear out in the oext few years.

In return, the administration will reportedly promise not to provide the Saudis with the F-15E, a substantially improved model.

According to the sources, the tentative plan to emphasize sale of the F-15s was dictated by a desire to keep the Saudi air fleet at maximum strength during tension in DHAKA, Bangladesh --- Floodwaters were receding Tnesday from parts of northern and western Bangladesh, but vast areas remained under water after seven weeks of the worst floods here in 40 years, officials said.

District administrators at northern Rajshahi and Chapai Nawabganj as well as western Rajbari, three of the most affected areas, said the Ganges River was still flowing above the danger level. But they said it had fallen substantially during the last 24 hours.

the Gulf region resulting from the Iran-Iraq war. In addition, manufacture of the earlier-model F-15s will be phased oot next year, and the administration, which estimates that the Saudis will oeed several replacements beginning in 1990, must act soon if the planes are to be built. The sources said intensive ad-ministratioo lobbying with Congress and American Jewish groups was being assessed by senior officials from the State and Defense departments, the National Securi-Council staff and the Office of Management and Budget. The administration viewpoint has been divided between two sets of officials. One group, centered in the State Department and the Pentagon, believes that U.S. credibility with the Saudis requires pushing the sale even at the risk of losing.

A more politically oriented faction, including the White House chief of staff, Howard H. Baker Jr., wants to spare Mr. Reagan a possibly bumiliating legislative defeat. The sources said the administration's tentative view was that the opponents still had sufficient votes in Congress to block the sale but that concessions under discussion would probably swiog enough votes to keep the opposi-tion from overriding a Reagan

If that analysis holds, some sources predicted, the administration is likely to make its move in early October.

In addition, the sources said. the administration tentatively envisions selling various electronic equipment to give the older-model Saudi F-15s better flight and combat capabilities; improved computers and gun barrels to upgrade Is Injured puters and gun barrels to upgrade newer models; and a oew type of nmunition feeder for the Saudis' M-109 self-propelled artillery.

However, the sources noted, these items are regarded as less important than the F-15s and could be removed from the package if the administration decided that such a move would win more support for the plane sale.

The sources said a potentially complicating factor was the administration's desire to sell 70 sboulder-fired, ground-to-air Stinger missiles and 14 launchers wrists in casts almost up to his elbows, sat through a lengthy hearto Bahrain.

Accidents involving New York City police cars totaled 3,162 in the year ended July 1, up 13 percent from a year earlier. Police Commissioner Benjamin Ward commented, "Historically, we have found that we have to do more retraining with the female driver than we do with the male driver." True enough. In April, 28 percent of female re-cruits and 7 percent of males failed the driving course. But policewomen are involved in proportionately fewer accidents than policemen. Ten percent of the force are women. In the first six months of this year, they were involved in 8 percent of the vehicle accidents.

The International Monetary Fund, with less built-in bias, tries to tell it as it is. The story is not cheerful. Unless policies change, annual growth in the rich world, which dominates conditions elsewhere, seems to be stuck at around 2.5 percent, in sad contrast with the 4.5 to 5 percent of the 1960s and early '70s. This rate is better than a recession but is unlikely to ease global problems. Neither unemployment in the rich countries nor the debt problems of the poor can be shifted away from the peril point without stronger growth, which the rich have to lead.

The Group of 10, proud that its members are in their fifth successive year of expansion, might recall that the starting point was highly depressed, that welfare ines have simply stopped growing quite so fast, and that the international debt storm still rages, ft is hard to be confident that perpetuation of the present system, which is about all that present growth in the world economy can promise, will avert social and political upsets in the non-communist world in the coming years.

A more expansionary world economy will not be easy to achieve. Much has changed since the early '70s. The trade-off between growth and inflation has worsened. Those who lead price and wage movements are quicker to take advantage pect is more likely to compound than to of dominant market positions when demand is strong. Additionally, the rising volatility of money flows across borders renders the task of policy-making far more difficult. And the vertiginous growth of taxes - they take 37 percent of the rich world's income, against 27 percent a few decades ago - probably saps the private initiative on which growth in market economics ultimately relies. Many governments therefore prefer discretion to valor, and assume that the namral rate of unemployment (the rate commensurate with low inflation) has simply risen and must be tolerated. Other observers think that jobs could still be created by old-fashioned reflationary methods, because if rising unemployment no longer reduces wage pressure, it is also true that shrinking unemployment, for some time, will not increase it. Both theses are uncertain. But action to reduce the lump of longterm unemployment, and the low demand. which weigh so heavily on developed and developing countries alike, could go faster than government advisers now envisage.

Creditor governments are naturally suspicious of May Day shipwreck messages from debtors. But the latest IMF analysis, which governments are discussing this week at the IMF-World Bank preliminary meetings in Washington, should make them suspect the complacency of their own advisers, too. ## Progress, but We're Not Out of the Woods

PARIS - The "double zero" treaty to eliminate Soviet and American medium-range nuclear missiles is not quite wrapped up, but it is well on its way. Already progress on this limited issue is sparking new efforts on more critical problems — the big long-range missiles, the balance of conventional forces, nuclear testing. So it is right to see the successful negotiations as a breakthrough and to evaluate it. There has already been a good deal of foolish speculation. People ask, is it the end of the Cold War? No.

but it is the start of a new period in East-West relations whose development cannot be foreseen. Is it the denuclearization of Europe? No. but, as NATO's secretary-general, Lord Carrington, has said, it does mean that "Europe will become a much less nuclear place."

Is it the beginning of the end of U.S. commit-ment to the defense of Western Europe? No. There are 325,000 American troops to incarnate the conviction that American and European security are a common stake.

There will be a lot more fuzzy debate about the importance of the treaty and what it portends, in both the United States and Europe, when it is signed and offered for ratification. It matters to put it in perspective from the outset.

1. In strict military terms, the treaty does not make a huge difference. To the extent that it changes the nuclear balance, it definitely favors the West and Asia, but the arsenals are still so huge and varied that the change will be marginal. 2. The deployment of American missiles in Europe was undertaken more for political than for military reasons. Other, less controversial meaBy Flora Lewis sures could have met the military threat of Soviet SS-20s. NATO felt it should make a demonstrative response to the threat of political intimidation that could weaken, or "decouple," Atlantic ties. This was achieved; the Russians are to pull out their missiles. The treaty is a political gain for the West. 3. The gain was won by steadfastness in the alliance as a whole, despite all the bickering and spurts of recrimination. It is impossible to say just what elements of the situation decided the Soviet turnaround, whether it was the Reagan administration's military buildup or Mikhail Gorbachev's sense of need for lessened East-West tensions to promote his domestic reform plans. But Soviet failure to solit the alliance was crucial.

4. Much of the European doubt and concern now expressed comes because leaders bought their own hard-sell arguments when American deployments were launched. They automatically get worried when there is a change in the barometer of Soviet-American relations, either for better or for worse, antil they see what it actually means for them. They will be reassured when they see the satisfaction of their own publics as the missiles start to be removed, and as their military planners adjust to new calculations.

5. Meanwhile, the agitation within establishments has led to new talk about more defense cooperation among Europeans. This is all to the good, especially because there is little chance of an increase in European conventional defense. That is all the more reason to move rapidly to probe

Even more important than the removal of some missiles, however, are certain precedents that the impending treaty will set. There is sym-bolic meaning, which should be neither exagger-ated nor brushed aside, in the fact that for the first time in the East-West arms race there is actually going to be joint reduction of one part of the arsenals instead of partial limits on expansion, as before. The arms race isn't over, but at last there is some official recognition of its futility. There will also be concrete new action.

1. Missiles will be physically destroyed, presun-ably before a global television audience, for the first time. Experts are only now facing the very complex problems that this will bring, particularly with solid-fuel missiles that are too dangerous simply to dismantle. The studies and experience can prove valuable for future disamament measmes, if such measures are negotiated.

2. An elaborate venification system will be put into effect, involving on-site inspection for the first time. It will not be as intrusive as originally thought, largely because Washington backed away from the idea of too many Russians poking around sensitive areas when Moscow unexpectedly reversed itself on inspections. However, the practice of ventication will provide an important test for provisions in an eventual treaty to cut back strategic missiles, perhaps making it a little easier to negotiate.

All this is progress, to be taken with sober satisfaction. We are not out of the woods, by a long shot, but we are walking again. The New York Times.

Gulf War: Seven Years Old and No End in Sight

By Drew Middleton

WASHINGTON - The war be-tween Iran and Iraq entered its eighth year this week. No one in the Western capitals knows the full extent of casualties, and it is doubtful hu even Teluan or Beginlad has reliable figures. But estimates run to well over half a million killed on each side, including civilians, and no end to the war is in sight.

Irsq closed the seventh year of combat by employing the air force, its most effective weapon, against Iran's most vulnerable targets: the refineries, oil lines, oil ports and tankers that handle Iran's primary export. Oil keeps the Iranian war machine going. Intelligence sources in the United States and abroad conclude that Iraq must continue its air offensive against the Iranian oil industry to force Tehran to reduce its war effort. Making allowance for exaggerated Iraqi claims, these sources feel fairly confident that Iran has suffered severely from the offensive and will suffer more as the year continues.

Iran has been unable to halt Iraqi bombers. Tehran's fighter force has too few aircraft and trained pilots. Iran has surface-to-air missiles - 12 battalions of U.S.-made Hawk missiles were available at the war's outset -but these have been singularly ineffective. And an early warning system began under the shah was never comted. So the Iraqis can pretty much pick the time and place for attacks, and carry them out with impunity.

Iraq is far less vulnerable. Its oil is exported by pipeline rather than by there are signs that Iran is about to do something to retrieve its military and international political positions.

Middle East sources report that there are indications that the Revolutionary Guards and the regular army are planning yet another "final offen-sive," although the area chosen for attack is as yet unknown.

A major offensive remains possible, although recent intelligence reports have indicated that even the fanatical leadership of the Revolutionary Guards in Tehran was shaken by the number of "martyrs" sent to paradise by Iraqi fire to the heavy attacks on Basra early this year. Iran can stand more losses, but barely. Whether Iraq can do so -its population is one-third that of Iran's - is problematical. Casualties have been heavy, especially among the trained troops who form the majority of the fighting forces. They are well-armed and disciplined, but if an offensive hits they will suffer. Iran is making an extensive effort to achieve independence in the manufacture of rifles, machine guns and ammunition. Reports say that mines more sophisticated than those used so far in the Gulf are being manufactured. Iran clearly is concerned about talk of an international arms embargo.

As the war enters another year, the government in Tehran shows no real algue of includity. A const fare, yes, but only if that is followed by punishment for Iraq: President Saddam Hussein must be deposed; Iraq must

O Drew Middleton.

WASHINGTON - What people call "Ronald Reagan's Inck" was amply demonstrated again last week. And again it is the character of his adversaries that enables the president to look so good.

So it has been throughout Mr. Reagan's political career. When he first ran for governor of California in 1966, he came up against Edmund (Pat) Brown, the two-term Democratic in-combent. Mr. Brown had enough charm and evident good will to have survived several verbal and political gaffes. But his administration had run out of gas and the voters had exhausted their patience. Enter "citizen-politician" Reagan, triumphant.

In 1970, the Democrats chose Assembly Speaker Jesse Unruh to chai-lenge Mr. Reagan's bid for re-elec-tion. Mr. Unruh, a brilliant politician of uncontrolled temperament had slimmed down from the 300 pound (135 kilogram) "Big Daddy" he had been, but the image of the roughneck boss of the legislature was indelible. Mr. Reagan won easily. In 1980, running for the presidency,

Mr. Reagan faced Jiminy Carter, who was battered by inflation, the hostage crisis and repeated displays of mcer-tainty. Result: a Reagan landslide. In 1984, it was Walter Mondale, carrying the burden of the Carter record. The AND SIN STREETS Reagan landslide was even larger. These last three years have been far alla a binar charistics. And what of the agreement the president announced? It is a modest

But it is an achievement, and it opens the way for accelerated negotiations on the far more difficult and vital question of Might long-range nuclear missiles. a political gift from Mr. Reagan to the Republican Party. It shows skeptics that building up U.S. military power is not simply an end in itself but may make the Soviets more tractable. It gives the administration a diplomatic victory perhaps large enough to eclipse, if not crase, the damage of the Iran-contra affair. The major Republican candidates for the 1988 nomination. George Bush and Bob Dole, recognize this. But those scrambling for a foothold in the party's right wing - Jack Kemp, Pierre du Pont, Alexander Haig and the Reverend Pat Robertson - are describing the proposed agreement as a threat to the West Lacking the courage to challenge Mr. Reagan directly, they blame it on Secretary of State George Shultz. With critics like these, Mr. Reagan looks magnificently moderate, a veritable statesman. And just to make the symmetry perfect, the liberal Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee did a similar job on themselves while attempting to derail the Supreme Court nomination of Judge Robert Bork. In the crucial week of Judge Bork's appearance, Senator Joseph Biden's plagiarism problem drew almost as much attention as the judge's testimony - and far more derision. If you look at the other senior Democrats on that committee, Edward Kennedy, Robert Byrd and Howard Metzenbanm, and reflect on the well-publicized incidents in their academic, personal, political or business lives, you have to wonder who is in a position to cast the first stone. What the committee lacked was a man of George Mitchell's stature. The Maine senator, the conscience of the Iran-contra hearings, a former federal judge intellectually competent and po-litically prepared to go toe-to-toe with Judge Bork, is not a member of the Judiciary Committee -- just Mr. Resgan's luck. The closing of La Prensa in Managua 15 months ago was a grim tightening of the Sandinist grip, and so it is only fair to hail the reopening of the newspaper as a harbin-ger of loosening. The Nicaraguan political opposition will again have a voice - presumably a full-throated and uncensored one, for otherwise the gesture is a farce. No single step that the Sandinists could have taken to meet their early obligations under the Central American peace plan has the same potential importance inside the country and the same resonance outside.

But it remains only a single step. Secretary of State George Shultz suggested recently what a reasonable "scorecard" might be: return of all expelled priests, and notjust the best known; release of all the thousands of political prisoners; press freedom extending well beyond "censored stalwarts" like La Prensa. The "basic test," he said, is whether Daniel Ortega engages "the [contra] resistance and the other [internal] Nicaraguan opposition parties in a true dialogue."

Here is the pinch. The Sandinists are a Marxist-Leninist party profoundly antagonistic to democracy. It misreads them to say that they are not true believers. They have rewritten their country's basic law, for instance, to subordinate the army and security forces to their party alone. This is how President Ortega comes to have the authority to "authorize," as the announcement said, reopening La Prensa. What he can give he can take away. Reopening La Prensa seems to be the sort of small test that he is ready to face not to bring democracy but to avoid democracy. Using what influence is available to insist that the Sandinists move on from small tests to large ones is the challenge before the Latin democracies now. that the clear certainty of resumed contra aid would be the most useful form that such influence could currently take. Their history and politics, however, lead most Central Americans to see that as an unacceptable form of U.S. intervention. They did not embrace a peace plan thinking that there was the stuff of a second democratic Costa Rica in Nicaragua. They did so believing, on the basis of six years' experience, that they preferred the rigors of peace to the rigors of continued contra war. This was the moment. they figured, to induce the Sandinists to buy off the contras' attack with progress toward pluralism. The reopening of La Prensa indicates the progress made - and the progress still to be made - in this risky passage.

- THE WASHINGTON POST.

That's One Big Credit Card

Depending on how you do the arithmetic, Ronald Reagan has raised taxes from 10 to 20 percent. That thought came to me from Gilbert Noble, a Californian accountant. "Deficit spending is more taxes," he wrote. "It's the same thing as using your credit card on a vacation. If you pay $1,000 cash and charge $2,000, your vacation costs $3,000." What Mr. Reagan has done, of course, has been to defer his tax increases, but they are as sure as death. The Democrats, Mr. Noble went on, must go on the offensive on taxes, pointing out "that $2 trillion added to the national debt is in fact additional taxes ... For Reagan to say he has not raised taxes is a lie and a cruel hoax."

Keeping a Door Open to Iran

The capacity of the Arab League to coerce Iran into making peace is limited; in practice that is also true of the UN Security Council. Sanctions could be passed, but Iran's sources of supply are too diverse; her capacity to substitute human resources for military technology is well known. Yet Iran is not enjoying either the war or her diplomatic isolatio Her offer of an "undeclared cease-fire" while responsibility for the war is investigated may not be satisfactory to Iraq but surely offers some ground for diplomacy to work on. The sure on Iran should be kept up but her bona fides in seeking terms for peace should not be dismissed out of hand. No other course offers any more credible hope. - The Financial Times (London).

Trade Deficit: Americans Will Have to Get Used to It

By Albert M. Wojnilower

B OSTON - The U.S. trade deficit grew when the dollar was soar-

the American economy was racing and when it was slumping, when the budget deficit was widening and when it was shrinking. It has been a trade deficit for all seasons. The trade deficit's underlying cause probably has little to do with finance. More likely, it is rooted in the globalization of technology, which has allowed new members to join the ranks of the industrial countries. As long as this process continues, the trade deficit will persist despite Americans' best efforts. In fact, Americans' best efforts could easily make things worse. For the established members of the industrial club, now including Japan, adjustment to this new competition is difficult. The United States has offered less resistance, in the form of trade protection, than have Europe and Japan. As a result, Europe and Japan still face wrenching industrial restructurings, while for the United States the worst may be over.

Not that Americans accepted "deining and when it was tumbling, when dustrialization" screnely. The cam- early 1960s, Americans' wages were the American economy was racing paign to bring down the dollar was a perhaps three times West Germans' paign to bring down the dollar was a beggar thy-neighbor policy directed at fellow members of the industrial establishment, since exchange rates have little relevance yet for the newcomers. Today the lower dollar is reducing the U.S. trade delicit with Europe and Japan - slowing their economies while the American deficit with the rest of the world is growing faster. How can international equilibrium be achieved? Wage differentials between the old and new industrial nations must shrink dramatically, and the newcomers must become consumers on a much larger scale. American workers used to merit higher pay because their productivity was higher. That was in the days when the factors behind that productivity — management, technology and training — could not readily be transferred or duplicated abroad. Now they can be and they are, and wages and 10 times wages in Japan. Today they are more or less equal. They remain much higher than in the "new" countries - perhaps six times the South Korean level, for example.

But South Korean wages and working conditions are shifting sharply in favor of employees, forcing businesses to reassess their global production strategies. Such labor market developments, and the politi-cal and social changes with which they are bound up, will make South Korea and other Asian industrial countries much larger consumers of their own products, and of imports.

The problem with the developing countries of Latin America is more difficult. Since their capacity to service debt depends on their ability to export still more manufactured goods, their industrial challenge to the rest of the world may be only beginning. Americans need to reconcile them-

WASHINGTON - The demo-cratic presidents of Costa Rica, Honduras, El Salvador and tionary president of Nicaragua, have knocked away the foundations of President Reagan's policy toward Central America: support for the contras and the fiction that Nicaragua menaces its neighbors. The presidents, in Guatemala

City last month, said that an end to assistance to all insurgent forces was indispensable. The Reagan administration should respect the presidents' vishes and should negotiate a separate treaty with Nicaragua that guarantees U.S. security requirements. Oscar Arias Sánchez of Costa Rica led the way as the author of the well-designed draft peace treaty. Marco Vinicio Cerezo of Guateworked with Nicaragua? Because it has never been tried. The Reagan mala, as catalyst, brought about unanimity. José Napoleón Duarte of El Salvador, by boldly accepting doctrine asserts the right to overthrow the Sandinist government or, the plan, recovered his deserved at a minimum, to dictate its overall reputation for political skill and valor. José Azcona Hoyo of Honduras, whose government has been submissive to Reagan policy, cou-rageously defied Washington.

Daniel Ortega Saavedra of Nicaragua only had to persuade the others that U.S. policy threatened the independence and democratic development not only of Nicaragua perhaps because it defined U.S. se-curity objectives - a course Reagan dvisers previously rejected, making it impossible for the Sandinists to respond coherently to U.S. concerns. The Reagan-Wright approach states that U.S. security needs will be the Sandinists cannot be trusted. The presidents rejected the ad-ministration's continued rehance on satisfied if Nicaragua agrees to deny military bases to any Communist-bloc country, pledges to pose no military or destabilizing threats to its a military solution when they stated that their "legitimate aspirations for peace and social justice, for liberty and reconciliation have been frustrated for many generations." neighbors and guarantees to respect In diplomacy, only amateurs rely on trust when dealing with adversar-ies. Yet lack of trust does not justify basic human rights as set forth in the Nicaraguan Constitution. Beyond this, the plan says that "the United States has no right to influence or determine the identity of the political leaders of Nicaragua and affirms the right of the Nicaraguans to self-determination free

Why has such an approach not The Central American leaders understood that Washington had given them a precise, reasonable formula-tion of U.S. security interests together with a self-denying ordinance against intervention. They moved resolutely toward dialogue and recosciliation. Their plan calls for an end to contra aid. The administration should listen to these leaders and abandon the fiction that democdeficit. In the present strong economy, it would be self-defeating to push for more exports: Further rapid increases in exports would only produce inflation without materially reducing the trade deficit. In the longer term, America cannot expect to cut its deficit by outcompeting the other established industrial countries. Ton great success would threaten them with recession and America with a political and economic backlash.

The only sustainable export market is among the developing coun-tries. But to increase sales to them quickly, the United States would have to import more industrial goods from them, pay higher prices for their raw materials or forgive their debts. While it is doing some of each of these things, it is doubtful that it is ready to do so on a much larger scale. Imports could be reduced through import substitution, reduction of general demand and protectionism. For now, substitution (making things at home rather than importing them) has the same drawback as export increases

- heightening inflationary pressure on domestic resources. Reduction of demand is a suphemism for recession, which no one wants. Unfortunately, protectionism is probably the only way to shrink the deficit in a hurry. So long as America's major trading partners cling to surpluses or remain condemned to them by their debts, Americans must learn if not to love the deficit at least to become more relaxed about it. They should content themselves with glacial progress until the new industrial competitors become vigorous buyers as well as sellers.

These two issues will decide whether the United States sees AIDS as a nanonal problem to be attacked nationally or as something that can be segmented and confined to those others. And that in turn will decide how much money, energy and planning will go into the effort to fight AIDS.

The first question is bubbling up more and more: Look, I am a heterosexual and 1 do not take drugs or sleep with junkies. Is it not true that tomorrow, as today, the victims will be the same - homosexuals, and addicts stupid enough to use dirty needles? The spread of AIDS to heterosexuals is documented, in bitter statistics. Dr. Sheldon H. Landesman, director of the -----AIDS study group at the State Univer-sity of New York Health Science Centhe sparse -----ter in Brooklyn, says that in New York City alone there are 100,000 intrave-nous drug-using males who have been infected with AIDS and there are 15,000 to 20,000 women who have been infected by having sex with addicts · ··· ·· ··· ···· ····· using contaminated needles. Then we go happen in the United States is not sci-inside; but still it spreads. ence but Russian roulette. Katie Leishman, in an article in the February issue of The Atlantic on hetero-sexuality and AIDS, put it this way: "It can't burt to think of the virus as having an intelligence, and a commitment to survival that exceeds that of many people." There is no cure or vaccine for AIDS, and there may not be for decades. Therefore, only people can fight it — people with the AIDS virus and people without it. Without the effort of one group, the other will fail. The untouched need the help of the sufferers and the AIDS carriers, who have to make the moral commitment not to have sexual intercourse with those not affected. There is no other way for the victims to guarantee - for their own souls' sake - that they are not spreading death. Society must persuade those who may have had sexual intercourse with carriers to be tested.

So it is plain self-interest --- as well as plain humanity — to try to protect anybody who may carry AIDS from the fearful discrimination, bigotry and iso-lation that goes with the disease. We will never succeed entirely, but at least the sufferers and their friends and families can be shown that the country is trying, through social education and through legislation. Now comes the Reagan administration and announces that it is against proposed federal legislation aimed at protecting victims of AIDS from discrimination. Leave it to the states, says Dr. Otis R. Bowen, the secretary of health and human services. That stance helps neither health nor human services. There is no legal reason to prevent a federal statute forbidding discrimination against AIDS victims. And the administration acknowledges that infected per-sons have been subject to discrimination. But Dr. Bowen says that such discrimination should be fought state by But will these women spread AIDS state. Or, don't do in one way what can be done 50 different ways - provided some states want to do it at all.

Dr. Bowen explains that under a system of state anti-discrimination laws, each state and Congress "will be able to observe and learn from the results."

AIDS carriers also will learn from Dr. Bowen. They will learn that as far as federal protection is concerned they are abandonesi. The "moral commitment" argument to AIDS carriers will still be valid. But unless the Congress refuses to go along with the administration's callousness, that argument may ring terribly hollow. The New York Times.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Vietnam: An American Who Was There Saw It Differently

Regarding the opinion column "Viet-nam: A Failure to Regard the People as record of their expressing themselves in Worthy Partners" (Sept. 15): As an American who lived through much of what Ambassador Bui Diem describes, 1 can only comment in sorrow at the inaccuracy of his account. I remember the future Vietnamese ambassador as ingratiatingly pro-Amer-ican, not as someone with doubts about the help that the United States attempted, perhaps ill-advisedly, to bring his country. How deep were his doubts when 1 first met him in 1966? How clearly did he express them to us, his many American friends and colleagues? "At the top levels of the administration, there is no evidence that anyone considered the South Vietnamese as partners," he writes. This is selective memory, at best. Beginning in 1955 (when I first visited Saigon on a fact-finding expedi-tion), considerable effort was being made to enlist Vietnamese cooperation in resisting Communist subversion, and this soon expanded into an extensive and loy-al partnership. In 1966 and 1967, for example, I ran a program that trained about 50,000 South Vietnamese rural pacification cadres to go into the country and help their compatriots resist the Communist takeover. We Americans did our best to turn the running of this and similar programs over to the Vietnamese. "Had the South Vietnamese been consulted in early 1965, it is likely they would have preferred either no intervention or a limited effort," the ambassador writes. Unfortunately, such alternatives were not available if people such as Bui record of their expressing themselves in favor of either captivity or suicide. "An agreement among the United States, South Vietnam and Laos, allowing U.S. troops to be stationed along the 17th narallel as a harrier, would have been quite feasible at the time," he writes. In fact, the main infiltration of North Vietnamese regular and irregular troops, as well as covert organizers, did not take place across the 17th parallel, as the ambassador knows. It came south through Laos and Cambodia; to talk of a stationary line along the parallel is nonsense.

If the United States made errors -and ese does not mean that they were united by a common nationalism. The Chinese, the Cambodians, the "hill tribes" speaking roughly a dozen different languages, the Roman Catholics and the other non-Buddhist religious groups were minorities who may have added up to a majority. It is misleading, therefore, for the ambassador to pretend that the "South Victnamese" were one nation, blessed with a nationalist consensus at variance with the policy of the United States. In this lack of a South Vietnamese consensus, in fact, lay the problem we both faced. Therein also lay the reason why we Americans should perhaps not have become involved, And, finally, therein certainly lies the fallacy of Ambassador Bin Diem's anti-American thesis. JOHN LIMOND HART.

Helping Raise the Numbers

Daniel Dagan's perceptive article, Watch the German and Jewish Numbers in Moscow" (Aug. 29), inaccurately asserts that there have been no known joint efforts by German and Jewish organizations to pressure Soviet authorities to treat visa applicants more generously.

In March 1986, the Volkswagen Foundation and I sponsored a confer-ence on the rights of Soviet minorities, specifically Germans and Jews, which ssued a declaration calling for freedom of movement. Prominent academic and blic figures, including officials of the Christian Democratic Union and the Social Democratic Party, took part. The conference's organizers, the American Jewish Committee and the Institut Für Ostrecht of Cologne University, are preparing an account of the proceedings for publication. Shortly after the conference ended, the Bundestag passed its first resolution on Soviet Jewry, calling on Moscow to grant Jews basic human rights including the right to emigrate, If the emigration numbers have grown, perhaps it is in part because of efforts such as these.

WE of the '60s loved the countercal-ture — the demonstrations, the sec-nal revolution, the love-ins, happenings and three-day rock festivals. But there is not a single movie out about this side of the '60s. Hollywood goes out of its way to avoid making such a film. In "Peggy Sue Got Married," Peggy Sue skipped all the way back to 1962. BAGHDAD - Locked in conventional war with Iran, Iraq is facing another war from within, waged by Kurdish guerrillas in the north and by a shadowy underground movement drawn from its Shiite Moslem majority, diplomats here say.

Both adversaries, diplomats and Iraqi officials say, are sponsored by Iran. Tehran, they say, is seek-ing to exploit traditional grievances to harass Iraq's Baathist leadership and divert its full energies from the main battlefields in the center and south of the 730 mile (1,170-kilometer) border.

In response, Iraq is said to have dynamited at least 500 Kurdish villages over the past six months int a ruthless drive to deny sanctuary to Kurdish guerrillas.

A Western diplomat called the razing of the villages and the relo-cation of 100,000 to 500,000 PAGES TO IND SUIFIE Kurds "a demographic revolution WIT: Nathand that has taken place under our noses in the past six months."

The Baryshnikov Crossover

By Anna Kisselgoff

New York Times Service NEW YORK — The time has come to state the obvious. A few months short of turning 40. after years of injuries and after performing less and less frequently with the American Ballet Theater in New York, Mikhail Baryshnikov is not the dancer we first saw here in 1974. But that is the image we all still carry in our minds. There is, however, a compelling, if different, Baryshnikov in our midst

Even critics can experience a hlinding moment of truth. Mine occurred recently, watching Baryshnikov perform splendidly with his own summer touring group, Baryshnikov & Co., at the Garden State Arts Center in New Jersey. The flash of illumination was that Baryshnikov had become one of the greatest crossover artists in popular American culture. At the end of this concert, teen-age girls screamed and yelled - but not before women old enough to be their mothers (they were their mothers!) did the same. Even the men beamed and managed a smile. Baryshnikov demonstrates an appeal far beyond the usual ballet audience. It is no accident that the

A Tribute to 'Groucho' Marxism

By Sheridan Morley mational Henald Tribune LONDON - As a history of Marxism, "Groucho" (at the Comedy) leaves rather too many questions unanswered, but as an endearing filial tribute to a great comic it works very well indeed, thanks largely to Frank Ferrante, a 24-vear-old American actor who plays the title role across 70 years of stage and screen history.

Originally cobbled together last year off-Broadway by Robert Fish-er and Groncho's son Arthur Mara, who also directs with the original New York cast, the script sets out to tell the story of Julius Henry Marx (the Groucho only came from a friendly fellow-vaudevillian after the brothers had spent years on the road as variously The 3 and 4 Nightingales) via several old

The industry group contended that failure of the Japanese to live up to the agreement in full has cost "We're positioning this car as the antidote to traditional transportation," said Leonard Pearlstein, president of Keye-Donna-Pearlstein, the Los Angeles agency that handles the Suzuki account. "We say that it can be for all kinds of people." U.S. companies $162 million in potential sales.

The government of Japan has denied repeatedly that it has violat-ed the accord. The part called for Japan to halt the "dumping" — or of computer chips in U.S. and other markets, and to give U.S. compa-mes more access to lucrative Japanese markets.

The industry group acknowl-edged, however, that Japan had re-duced its dumping of computer chips in the United States and it noted "a gradual reduction" in markets outside the United States.

The administration imposed $300 million in penalty tariffs in April on selected Japanese elec-tronic products to protest alleged Japanese failure to comply with the agreement, In June, President Ronald Reagan lifted $51 million of the tariffs, citing some movement toward Japanese compliance.

Bot in a letter to Mr. Reagan, the industry association's president, Andrew A. Procassini, said the administration should consider reapplying the sanctions in fall. As part of the pact, the United States suspended investigations that could have led to stiff penalty duties on Japanese computer chips.

various tilles, including the Finan-cial Times and Penguin," said Tony Pennie, an analyst with the brokerage James Capel & Co. in London. Speculation of an asset-stripping "breakup" bid has fostered a dramatic but sporadic upward movement in Pearson's shares over the past 20 months.

Pearson's share price has climbed from about 300 pence at the end of 1985 to just below 600 pence at the close of last year. On Tuesday, it shot above 900 for the first time.

Any bid for Pearson by News Corp. would face a variety of ohstacles, analysts noted, including ob-jections from the government monopolies commis

In addition, analysts said, about 30 percent of Pearson is believed to be in friendly hands. The "friendly" holdings include a 20 percent stake held by the Pearson family. Michel David-Weill, a Pearson director and a senior partner of the investment bankers Lazard Frères & Co. of New York and Paris holds an estimated 10 percent. That stake is believed by many analysts to be a vehicle to ensure the independence of Lazard in the event of a takeover bid for Pearson. Pearson owns 50 percent of La son. His stake, acquired in May for £62 million, is described by the Italian industrialist as a "longterm" investment. Meanwhile, a spokesman for Sky Channel said that Mr. Murdoch would increase his stake in the Enropean satellite television company by subscribing massively to a £22.6 million increase in capital. Mr. Murdoch owns 82 percent of Sky Channel, which he founded in 1981.

TEXAS: State's Economic Pulse Strengthens, but Slow Recovery Is Expected

Dollar Closes Higher on Gulf Fears

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches NEW YORK - The dollar closed higher Tuesday against all major foreign currencies as hostil-ities in the Gulf triggered the dollar-buying, or flight to quality, that often accompanies global unrest. The dollar rose by nearly 1.5 pfennigs in New York, closing at 1.8245 Deutsche marks, up from 1.8100 on Mondey.

"We saw a flight to U.S. dollars this morning and this afternoon," he said.

He said that even though few raders were taking long positions before the international financial gatherings that begin later this week, "tension in the Gulf is tending people to buy dollars ahead of

NEW YORK - Transcript of ery state and every city interview with Senator Joseph Biden about his curious propensity for speaking in other men's oratory:

Question: Senator, when did you first notice this impulse to ma other people's oratory your own?

Answer: Unaccustomed as I am to public speaking, I want to say how delighted I am to be back here in this great city. I am reminded of a story. A funny thing happened to me on the way over here today ---

Q. To move on, Senator: If it turns out this publicity about your curious propensity was inspired by political opponents to knock you out of the presidential race, how will you respond?

A. With malice toward none; with charity for all. With firmness in the right, as God gives me to see the right. I will strive on to finish the work I am in: to hind up the nation's wounds; to care for him who shall have borne the hartle, and for his widow, and his ornhan .

Q. If the contest is going to be vigorous enough to create widows and orphans, will you call on the United States for sacrifice and

A. America's present need is not heroics but heating, not noscrums but normalcy.

Q. So in spite of wounds that will have to be bound up and battle bearers to be cared for, you expect Deace?

A. Gentlemen may cry, peace, peace - but there is no peace. Is life so dear, or peace so sweet, as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery? I know not what course others may take, but as for

Q. Considering the difficulties the United States faces today, sir, do you think it wants a dreamer in the White House?

A. I say to you, my friend, even though we face the difficulties of today and tomorrow, I still have a dream. It is a dream deeply rooted in the American dream. I have a dream that one day this nation will rise up and live out the true meaning of its creed --- we hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal. When we

A. These political enemies are not content to attack me, and my family, and my curious propensity. No, not content with that, they now attack my little dog Fala.

Q. Speaking of attacks, Senator, what is your answer to Democrats who fear that if nominated your acceptance speech will say, "Now let us sit upon the earth and tell sad stories of the death of the Democratic Party"?

A. To those Democrats, as to all fearful Americans, I say, the only thing we have to fear is fear itself, nameless, unreasoning fear that -Q. Sure, but what'll you offer potential allies to fight with you in such an exhausting struggle? A. I have never offered anything but blood, toil, tears and sweat, nor will this generation recoil from the fight, for to some generations much is given, of other generations much is asked, and this generation has a rendezvous with destiny.

Q. Senator, I'll put it blumtly: Are you letting the word go forth from this time and place, to friend and foe alike, that the torch has been passed to a new generation of American -born in this century, tempered by what do you say to those people who would press down upon fabor a crown of thorns and crucify mankind upon a cross of gold?
